

Federal Civilian Employees Steps to Prepare for a Reduction in Force

If you work for a federal government agency that is preparing for a reduction in force, there are steps you can take now to prepare to apply for unemployment insurance (UI) benefits (also called filing an initial claim) in Maryland.

- Gather your wage and employment documents: When you apply for UI benefits, you will need to provide information about your employment history and wages (for the last 18 months).
 - If possible, download the following documents while you are employed: Standard Form 50, eOPF file, recent pay stubs, and W-2s.
 - When you separate from employment, you will receive the Standard Form 8, which you may need to file for UI benefits.
- 2. Prepare supplemental information: When you apply for UI benefits in Maryland, you can upload supporting documents.
 - If you have documentation that may help demonstrate your eligibility for UI benefits, such as performance evaluations or employment offers, save them in advance.
- 3. Know when to file: Do not apply for UI benefits until after you officially separate from employment, as this will affect your eligibility for benefits.
 - If you are on administrative leave, you are still employed and are not eligible for UI benefits. However, if you separate from employment at a later time, you may be eligible.
- 4. Determine your duty station: As a federal civilian employee, you may apply for UI benefits in Maryland if:
 - your last official duty station was in Maryland (duty station is listed on your SF-50); or,
 - you are a Maryland resident, and your last official duty station was outside of the United States; or,
 - you are a Maryland resident, separated from federal employment, and then worked in non-federal employment in Maryland.

If this criteria does not apply to you, apply for UI: in the U.S. state or district where your duty station is located; or, in your U.S. state or district of residence (if your duty station was outside of the U.S. or if you separated from federal employment and then worked in non-federal employment).

For more information, see Maryland Unemployment Insurance for Federal Employees: Frequently Asked Questions (online at MDunemployment.com).